WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1880. Important Discoveries in the Pacific.

Mr. Thomas Gray of the London Board of Trade, has recently published some observa-tions on the equatorial currents of the East-ern Pacific which not only concern the navi-gator, but are of general scientific interest. These observations were taken by Captain McKirdy, of the steamship Perusia, plying between Peru and China, and their results show, as Mr. Gray says, that some of the currents of the Pacific ocean are not what they have hitherto been thought to be. The Admiralty charts and almost all ocean charts delineate a counter equatorial current, north of the Equator and between the meridians of the Sandwich Islands and South America, and running eastwardly instead of obeying the general westward impulse of all equatorial waters. In order to prove whether it exists or not Capt. McKirdy ran his ship from Callao to Honelalu on a straight line course, and repeatedly found that the supposed counter current had no existence in the spring within the contrary, a steady current setting westward was met day by day. On the third survey of the acean area in which hydrographers have generally placed the equatorial counter current, when in latitude 2 degrees north, longitude 12 limits assigned to it by the charts, but, on the tude 122 degrees west, an extraordinary change took place. In a four hours' run the tempera-ture of the sea "went down with a jump from 79 to 71 degrees, and the water changed color House had been lifted off my manly bosom." from a deep blueish black to a dark dirty green"—the former color and high temperature indicating unerringly the presence of the great westerly equatorial current, and the latter with the low temperature, the sweep of Humboldt's current, a vast flow from the Anhad now conclusive evidence that his ship, to use his own words, "had been contending with a mighty river running partially through the Pacific ocean to the westward."

Many years ago Lieutenant Maury said; There are some of these equatorial currents in the Pacific which I do not understand, and observations are insufficient." The present results of Captain McKirdy's explorations go far to clear up the long-felt mystery. That an equatorial counter current does exist some-where in the broad Pacific is unquestionable, and Captain McKirdy recognizes its existence, though his researches necessitate a reconstruction of the charts which locate it. But the chief result of his labors is the discovery of the powerful westerly current of "deep, deep blue," easily distinguished from the bright, beautiful blue waters of the surrounding North Pacific and detected by its temperature, but marked geographically by its irregular "horn-shaped extension" (one end pointing to Panama and the other to the Sandwich

The explanation of this remarkable current is found in the southerly drift along the Caliemian and Mexican coasts of a body of water, possibly a continuation of the Japan Stream, or Kuro Siwo. "This body of water," he says, "gets pent up in the Gulf of Panama; it cannot get south on account of Humbeldt's current, which is constantly flowing north along the coast of Peru; it follows, then, that these two streams, each striving for the mastery, change their course to the westward, and rush along side by side near to the Equator until they meet the equatorial counter current, which splits them like a wedge, the northern cae preserving its 'deep, deep blue,' and the southern its 'dark, dirty green,' which clearly proves it to be of extreme southern origin.' This would explain the case of a Japanese junk cast on the Sandwich Islands after a ten months drift, moving on the great circle track of the "black stream," or Kuro Siwo, across the Pacific to the Californian and Mexican coasts and thence westwandly. The newly noted stream will be of great value to the mariner, as in it the Parasis made ove rthree hundred and twenty-five miles a day. But to until they meet the equatorial counter current, hundred and twenty-five miles a day. But to the physicist the discovery announced by Captain McKirdy will be of commanding interest, because it clearly elecidates and establishes the unity and continuity of the North Pacific currents, which starting from the Asiatic coast, cross its broad expanse to America and encircle the entire bosom of that ocean. -N, Y.

The Chinese and Macao.

It was stated a few weeks ago in the Pall Most Gazette that the Chinese were laying claim to the Portuguese settlement of Macao, but I'm going to marry you out of spite. and, according to the Similard's correspondent at Lisbon, the strange news produced no little sensation in that city. We now learn the formality of annexation has been carried out in true Chinese fashion. It appears that in the glass over the mantel-piece, winked at the Viceroy of the "Two Kuangs" made his appearance at Macao quite unexpectedly in great state, and was received with hefitting honors. He laid stress upon the fact that although the Portuguese had held intercourse with China longer than any European nation, yet there was no treaty between the two Powers. There would, however, so he was pleased to say, be no difficulty whatever in Alot of this superior brand of coal to bulk for house settling a treaty which should put the Portuon the same footing as other nations, not forgetting that acquired rights should be respected." In fact, he was most pleasant his assurances, thanked the Governor for his most courteous reception, and departed as he had come, after a stay of three hours. It was a new rendering of the famous saying, "I came, I saw, I conquered." Having returned home, be at once communicated to the Pekin Government the fact that in pursuance of instructions he had visited Macao, had been received by the Governor with all kumility, that Portugui had promised to pay tribute, and that, in fact, Macan had returned to Chinese peasession. The Portuguese official, equally charmed, informed his Government that nothing but advantage could accrue to his country from so friendly a visit. As a matter of fact, however. China does claim Macao, and the Portuguese are likely to have some trouble in resisting the claim, are not secured by treaty nights. This roundabout assertion of the position of China at this particular time looks very much like a deliberately conceived plan for the recovery of all possessions taken from her during the last few handred years.

A Friendly "Lift."

General R. Hawley of Connecticut is a Republican candidate for Congress, and lately obtained the services of his friend Mark Twain to introduce him to the electors. The meeting was held at Elmira (N. Y.), and thus the ons humorist in purt delivered himself "I see I am advertised to introduce the speak-er of the evening, General Hawley of Connecti-cut, and I see it is the report that I am to make a political speech. But I am here only to give him a character from his last place. As a pure citizen, I respect him; as a personal friend of years, I have the warmest regard for him; as a neighbor whose vegetable gar-den adjoins mine, why-why, I watch him. That's nothing; we all do that with any neighbor. General Hawley keeps his promises not coly in private but in public. He is an editor who believes what he writes in his own paper. He is broad-scaled generous, noble, iberal, alive to his moral and religious res-constitities. Whenever the contribution-box was passed. I never knew him to take out a cent. He is a square, true, honest man in politics, and I must say he occupies a mighty lonestone position. He has never shirked a daty, or backed down from any postion taken in public life. He is an American of Ameri-cans, so broad, so bounciful, in his character that he never turned a tramp empty-hunded from his door, but always gave him a letter of introduction to me. His public trusts have been many, and never in the elightest did he prove unfulthful. Pure, howest, incorruptible that is Joe Hawley. Such a man in politics is like a bettle of perfumery in a gine factory—it may modify the stench if it doesn't destruy it. And now, in speaking thus highly of him, I haven't said any more of him than I would say of neyself." And now, in speaking thus highly o

He was a Chicago Man

You never can get ahead of Chicago. A young man of that city had long paid attention to one of the fairest daughters of Cleveland, now visiting here, and had been engaged to her, wher, suddenly, for some reason or other, she concluded to marry some one else. The unsuspecting young man went to call on her, at her aunt's house, on Calumet avenue, last week, and as she drew back her ruby lips, when he prepared to greet her with a loving kiss, he at once thought there was something up, and glancing at her again, he something up, and glancing at her again, he noticed that she were none of his gifts, which he conjectured were in an ominous looking parcel on the sofa. This conjecture was sub sequently proved to be correct.

"Mr. So-and-so," she said—she had been went to address him as "Augustus" and "darling"—" Mr. So-and-so, I have consulted my heart seriously, and discovered what I have often suspected-that we are not fitted to mak his chair he danced tightly around the room shouting, "Hurrah? You are the best girl in The beautiul girl gazed at him for a moment as if she thought he had bidden a long farewell to all his gray brain matter, and said " what does this mean? "Mean?" cried the young man, walking on his hands up and down the sumptuous drawing room; "wby it means I in free. I've been tarctic basin which penetrates to the Equator and curves to the west of the Galapagos trying to muster up courage to ask you for Islands. The able observer on the Perusia I couldn't-it would have been going back on my word, and besides, I knew that husbands at this period of commercial depression were hard to get. "Sir-r-r !" said she, glaring at him like a tiger cat, "your presents are all in this package. Take them and return me mine. This painful interview had, perhaps, better be brought to an end."

"I'll send you all I can find, but I guess our cook carried off your Tennyson with marked passages in it-I lent it to her-and some of your locks of hair, and pressed rose buds and things, I burned when I was cleaning up my room the other day, and as for your ring, I don't think Cora will give it to me."

"And, pray, who may this creature, 'Cora, be? Is she the cook at your boarding house?"
"Oh, bless you, no—she's the girl I'm in love with, and that I'm going to propose to this very evening as soon as you give me that package and let me go. I hope you put the diamond ear-rings I gave you into it, I'll give them to her and be $200 ahead."

The beautiful Cleveland girl's cheeks glowed so that you could have lighted a match at them if you hadn't been afraid of having your fingers burned off by the glare of her eyes "Tell me about this 'Cora' of yours. Is

"Tell me about this she good looking?"
"Good looking?" said the young man excitedly; "hold on till I show you her picture,"

And I want you to understand that our engagement is to hold, and if you do not marry me by the first day of November, which will be as soon I can get my trousseau ready, I'll sue you for breach of pr mise, laying the damages at $500,000; and I have got letters from you that will make the jury find for the plaintiff without leaving the box. And if you ever mention that wretched creature's name to me again the longest of y you live, I'll shoot you, and scratch her ey sout-so there! I don't care for you one bit, She hurled herself into his arms like a whirlwind and sobbed upon his shoulder.
